Church and the City." He took his text from the 18th Revelation, 21-2, which refers to the contrast between two cities. He dwelt along the line of the rapid growth of new cities and read statistics showing the amount of crime committed in those places. He said, among other things, that New York city, which occupies a space of 360 square miles, has a population as great as the original thirteen colonies. He also said that special efforts should be made for the redemption of these wicked cities.
